ABSTRACT

Techniques are disclosed for storing document content in a manner which improves efficiency and/or speed of servicing content requests. Expected and/or observed popularity of stored objects is used to determine where a particular object should be physically placed in a distributed computing network. The disclosed techniques may be used for initially placing objects and/or for subsequently placing objects at different and/or additional locations in the network.

5